LECTURE ON FORESTRY.

Delivered at the Leon Hotel Wednesday Evening by Enos A. Mills of National Forestry Service.

Mr. Enos A. Mills lectured at the Leon Hotel, Wednesday night on foresry. A life-long student of this inter- of last week, continues unabated. esting subject, Mr. Mills was thoroughly prepared to present it in a clear, torcible and interesting manner that carried conviction to his audience. A pleasing voice and personality, clear enunciation and an unhesitating flow of language, marks the successful lecturer, and all of these essentials are possessed by Mr. Mills.

The speaker presented his subject first from an economic standpoint. He showed how the wealth of the nation Saxon; for Boulevard, O. C. VanBrunt, | could be augmented by the enlargement and protection of its forest area. He explained how largely the forests conduced to the comfort and health of hu-man beings; how dependent upon them were the streams and rivers for the conservation of their water supply, and how large a part they played in the prevention of floods, and how they served as a bulwark against waves of either extreme heat or cold.

Mr. Mills made a plea for the birds. Not from a sentimental standpoint, but from the standpoint of economy. He pointed out the important part they played in the preservation of trees from the ravages of insects, mice and rabbits; and all of his statements, without going into dry, statistical detail, were emphasized by proofs taken from scientific reports.

Mr. Mills spoke to the young women of the Female College Wednesday morning, and to the high school students Thursday morning, and in every case he met with the most interested attention from every one of his varied audi-
